Building your tree of life

All life is connected, grows and comes from a common origin

Exercise - Pair sharing

What is something you learned about yourself by writing and sharing your Tree of Life?

Can an individual's personal history and lived experiences influence how they plan for their business?

My future

Turning a business idea into reality

Coming up with great ideas is easy. It's putting those ideas into action that's difficult

In order to turn your dreams about the next best service or product into a tangible, valuable reality, you need to take the right first steps.

1. Write your business idea down

2. Make a plan to network and get the help you need

If you need funding, make a list of people you know who might help, and plan to attend specific business events where you can use your pitch and written plan.

Do the same for partners that will buttress your strengths. Consult with business peers to learn what you

Take the initiative to join recognized new business support groups and the local chapter of relevant industry associations to meet people you can help, as well as people who can help you

3. Set target dates and milestones to track your progress

4. TAKE ACTION ON YOUR PLAN AND FINISH SOMETHING EVERY DAY

your culture must be not afraid to pivot and to adapt your plan as things change.

Don't get caught up in the crisis of the day, or be satisfied with just working hard.

You need to build momentum,
and every milestone completion builds momentum. Celebrate each step forward, and check off completions to keep the team motivated and moving forward.

5. Focus on one business instead of dividing your limited capital

Dilution of focus kills too many small businesses, as they try to attract more customers and counter more competitors. The best are determined to do one thing well, rather than many things poorly, with limited resources. Time is also of the essence, so make your impact early.

For aspiring entrepreneurs and business owners, ideas will not turn into businesses, no matter how long you wait, or how hard you work, until someone builds and executes a plan with specific milestones and expected results.

Business Plan for a project

A Business Plan is a written document that defines the goals of your business and describes how you will attain those goals.

A Business Plan is worth your considerable investment of time, effort, and energy.

A Business Plan sets objectives, defines budgets, engages partners, and anticipates problems before they occur.

Reasons why you need a strong business plan

1. To attract investors.
2. To see if your business ideas will work.
3. To outline each area of the business.
4. To set up milestones.
5. To learn about the market.
6. To secure additional funding or loans.
7. To determine your financial needs.
8. To monitor your business.

Common parts of a good business plan

Nine common parts of a good Business Plan are:

1. Executive summary
2. Company summary
3. Products and services
4. Management and personnel
5. Market analysis
6. Sales strategy
7. SWOT analysis
8. Milestones
9. Financial information and projections

1. Executive summary

The Executive Summary of a Business Plan is a page introduction to your Business Plan.

The Executive Summary is critical, because many individuals only read the summary.

The executive summary includes:

1. Business description – business name, industry, founder/s of the business information
2. Product/service – what problem is the business solving?
3. Objectives
4. Target Market
5. Competitive Advantage
6. Financial Highlights

2. Business/Company summary

- How the product/service is delivered
- Who uses the product
- How product is produced
- Quality of the product

4. Management and personnel

The Management Team section outlines:

- i. Organizational Structure: Highlights the hierarchy and outlines responsibilities and decision-making powers.
- ii. Management Team: Highlights the track record of the company/group's managers. You may also offer details about key qualifications, experiences, or outstanding skills, which could add a competitive edge to the image of the business.
- iii. Working Structure: Highlights how your management team will operate within your defined organizational structure.

4. Management and personnel- Cont'

iv. Expertise: Highlights the business expertise of your management and senior team.

v. Skills Gap: Highlights plans to improve your company/group's overall skills or expertise. In this section, you should discuss opportunities and plans to acquire new information and knowledge that will add value.

The typically hierarchical arrangement of lines of authority, communications, rights and duties of an organization. Organizational structure determines how the roles, power and responsibilities are assigned, controlled, and coordinated, and how information flows between the different levels of management

Customers

- Who are the buyers – what is the profile of the target market?
- Market share – what type of customers are the company targeting?
- Where are they located
- How much are they willing to pay
- What is their ability to buy the product?

Competition

- Market share of competition – how will the company increase its market share?

6. Sales strategy

SALES STRATEGY

A sales strategy is a plan by a business or individual on how to go about selling products and services and increasing profits.

A sales strategy is about:

- i. Product – how will the company sell the product to its customers
- ii. Promotion
- iii. Pricing – what is the price of the
- iv. products – why is it set up that way?
- v. Place

7. SWOT Analysis

SWOT analysis is a planning tool that evaluates an organization's strengths, weaknesses, opportunities and threats. It is used to formulate the organization's objectives and identify the internal (weaknesses) and external (threats) concerns that can affect a company reaching its objectives.

Strengths	Weaknesses
• Strength 1 • Strength 2	• Weakness 1 • Weakness 2
Opportunities	Threats
• Opportunity 1 • Opportunity 2	• Threat 1 • Threat 2

Limiting beliefs

Now as you got the basics records keeping practices for your business. What could limit you to implement the learn practices?

Understanding limiting beliefs

“Limiting Belief” --

A belief that makes us doubt what we can do or be, makes us hesitate and ultimately holds us back from achieving what we want.

What do ‘Limiting Beliefs’ look like?

They can come in the form of excuses, negative thoughts, worries, justifications, past failures, fears, etc. -- about yourself personally

Examples of limiting beliefs related to bookkeeping

Fear of making mistakes in documentation

- “I can’t write this correctly, so I shouldn’t even try.”
- “If my records aren’t perfect, I’ll get in trouble.”

Self-doubt about competence

- “I’m not smart enough to manage my business finances.”
- “Other business owners are better at this than me.”

Avoidance of financial tasks

- “I’m not good with numbers or forms, so bookkeeping isn’t for me.”
- “I’ll never understand invoices, receipts, or reports.”

Procrastination and delays

- “I’ll do it later when I feel more capable.”
- “It’s too complicated, I’ll just ignore it.”

Exercise

Let's take a moment to reflect on what might hold us back or limit us practicing keeping our business records effectively. Think about any thoughts or beliefs that make you hesitate, feel overwhelmed, or avoid managing your records. These could be related to skills, confidence, time, or literacy, etc.

Your REFRAME = Another belief about your positive potential

Reframing our Limiting Beliefs

Limiting Beliefs

Your LIMITING BELIEF

= Doubts about your potential & ability

"I can't start now, it's too late..."

Your REFRAME

= Another belief you have about your positive potential

"I've been successful when trying some new things..."

This process takes time!

Go back to your limiting beliefs and reframe them to your positive potential towards records keeping for your business.
